

About SEEd

SEEd (Sustainability and Environmental Education) is a registered UK charity with the primary objective of enabling more of the education sector to engage with Education for Sustainable Development and Environmental Education.

SEEd does this by being an umbrella organisation for national Non-Government Organisations interested in environmental Education for Sustainable Development and the environment.

“SEEd has taken up a previously unoccupied role as a coordinator for national action on ESD, and its policies and actions since its launch reflect its importance as a driver for ESD action and the Decade for Education for Sustainable Development.”

Unesco UKNC (2010) ESD in the UK in 2009:
Update to the 2008 Report; London: UK
National Commission for Unesco

Contact Us

We really want to hear from you! Email and tell us your ESD/EE story, what you are doing, or what you need from an organisation such as SEEd.

SEEd is a national membership body for organisations and individuals in the UK committed to supporting education for a more sustainable world.

SEEd – Supporting education for a more sustainable world

SEEd

9 – 13 Kean Street
London WC2B 4AY

Telephone: 020 7420 4446

Email: info@se-ed.org.uk

Website: se-ed.org.uk

Registered Charity Number: 1129275

SEEd – Supporting education for a more sustainable world

A brief history of SEEd and CEE

The Council for Environmental Education (CEE) was established in the 1960's as a national membership body for organisations and individuals in England committed to environmental education and education for sustainable development.

Much has changed since the 1960's and new directions were required for the organisation to meet the new challenges and changes faced by both the education and environmental sector.

Driving sustainable education / ESD

Relaunched in 2008 under the new charity name 'SEEd', Sustainability and Environmental Education seeks to drive forward Education for Sustainable Development into the mainstream of the education system – schools, colleges, universities, teachers and their communities.

SEEd is able to do this by being a national membership body that facilitates wider stakeholder engagement processes, promotes shared learning and develops cross sector partnerships.

SEEd seeks to drive forward Education for Sustainable Development into the mainstream of the education system – schools, colleges, universities, teachers and their communities.

We do this by:

- offering support and guidance;
- enabling capacity building; and
- developing communities of practice that share and learn together.

Become a SEEd member: become part of the fast growing and exciting new SEEd

Membership has benefits such as: access to resources, up-to-date information, discussion groups, professional development, and research. You can also be part of consultations and help create the change we need to embed this in all our education work. For more information, visit: se-ed.org.uk.

What we do

SEEd offers a wide range of services to NGOs, teachers, local authorities and community practitioners in the UK. These services include:

- providing facilitated learning workshops for members;
- members only area for discussions on the website;
- updates on policy through fora;
- the research into issues and practice that will help everyone e.g. understanding teachers needs, or a baseline of practice;
- organising events to highlight the state of environmental education and education for sustainable development in our schools;
- providing training and professional development courses; and
- offering an engaging and interactive website that provides a gateway into SEEd's work, member organisations, networking opportunities and current ESD news.

We really want to hear from you! Email and tell us your ESD/EE story, what you are doing, or what you need from an organisation such as SEEd.